

Sophie ROSE

Director, Membership and Institutions - World Energy Council

Sophie is Director of Membership & Institutions at the World Energy Council, based in Brussels. She leads the Council's global membership strategy, guiding a team responsible for strengthening engagement and collaboration across the organisation's global network of Member Committees. Her work focuses on enhancing the value of Council membership, ensuring it is consistently experienced across the global community, and supporting the recruitment and development of Member Committees.

She also oversees key strategic communities, including World Energy Women and the Council's Future Energy Leaders Programme, fostering connections among women and the next generation of energy leaders through structured development initiatives and international collaboration.

Sophie brings over 10 years of experience in multilateral engagement and stakeholder management within international organisations. She holds an MSc in Populations and Development from the London School of Economics and Political Science, as well as an MA in European Studies and a BA in Communication Sciences from the Université Libre de Bruxelles.
